About

I have had wide ranging consultancy and research based experience in Asia, Africa, Latin America and the Middle East during the 1990s, around the theme of participatory development and, during the last decade, on general budget support and on the role of faith based organisations in development. I have also had extensive experience running workshops and short courses around the theme of participatory development during the 1990s. Since 2000, the focus of my work has shifted to postgraduate teaching, on rural development, NGOs and the social analysis of poverty and inequality, in both on campus and distance learning modes, together with increasing roles in programme management and the management of learning and teaching in the department more generally.

Qualifications

- 1989 PhD, University of Manchester
- 1985 MSc, University of Manchester
- 1982 Licence, University of Paris
- 1981 BA, University of Kent
- 1980 Diploma, University of Paris

Biography

Robert studied Economics and Law at the University of Kent and French Law at the University of Paris. He then went on to study Science and Technology Policy for Developing Countries at the Univeristy of Manchester, where he also obtained his PhD in 1989, after which he joined IDD, in 1989.

Teaching

I direct the campus and distance learning based IDD Masters Programmes on International Development and convene and teach on three modules (Rural Poverty and Development, Social Analysis of Development/Poverty and Inequality and NGOs in a Changing International Context), in both campus based and distance learning modes.

Postgraduate supervision

I am currently supervising two PhD students, one of whom is studying the sustainability of rural water points in Malawi. The other is studying Charismatic Christianity and adherent social mobility in Ghana.

Doctoral research

PhD title Technology for rural development in India.
