International Political Economy

The Department of Political Science and International Studies hosts a large and vibrant International Political Economy research community.

Launched in 2002, the International Political Economy Research Group holds a series of regular events each term, including: guest seminars by leading scholars in the field; roundtable discussions on contemporary developments in the world economy; research workshops and policy engagement forums; as well as major conferences. In addition to academic staff, our large community of doctoral researchers and graduate students play a major role in International Political Economy Research Group events.

Recent events:

Global Economic Crisis: Which economy and what crisis, an exploration of alternative frameworks (/schools/government-society/departments/political-science-international-studies/news/2014/05/global-economic-crisis.aspx) (02 April 2014) This workshop was set up with the aim of facilitating discussion across different critical approaches to political economy, to develop and clarify the conceptual assumptions that alternative positions have and hence to sharpen our understanding of similarities and substantive differences. The aim was to initiate a research project that moved beyond the current situation of 'parallel conversations' and begins a more systematic understanding and synthesis of political economic approaches to the global financial crisis.
