APPG Universities - A Comment from Dr Chris Allen (/schools/social-policy/news/2015/06/appg-universities.aspx)

I was invited to the House of Lords to talk to the All Party Parliamentary University Group (APPUG) on Tuesday 23 June about the impact of counter-terror policies on the experience of Muslim students. Established since 1994, the APPUG brings together Members of the House of Commons and Lords with Vice Chancellors and other university representatives to discuss matters affecting Higher Education.

Blog: Do 'sticky' institutions always survive? The demise of the Audit Commission (http://inlogov.com/2015/06/24/do-sticky-institutions-always-survive-the-demise-of-the-audit-commission/)

Written by Katherine Tonkiss. "The Audit Commission played a central role in the audit, inspection, performance improvement and regulation of local authorities (and other public service providers) in England for over thirty years. Operating at arm's length from government, it thrived under the efficiency and performance improvement agendas of successive Conservative and Labour governments, growing into a large and powerful public body."

Blog: Prizes for local government: Latin America or England? (https://iddbirmingham.wordpress.com/2015/06/19/prizes-for-local-government-latin-america-or-england/)

Written by Dr Andrew Nickson. Last week I was in Panama City to deliver the inaugural address at the 2nd Latin American seminar on good practices in municipal management. My topic was the challenges of sub-national governance in the region, after thirty years during which local political democracy has gradually become the norm, accompanied by a growing share of fiscal revenue devolved to local government.
