MS866 Papers relating to Vera Manley donated to CRL by Vera's daughter - Review by George Dibble, (BA History, final year), Cadbury Research Library Volunteer, 24 Jan 2014

'It is no longer a strike but the revolution that I have hinted at in so many letters', writes Vera Manly in a letter to her family, Feb / March 1917. Whilst studying music at the Academy in Petrograd (later Leningrad, now St Petersburg), Vera charts the unfolding events of the 1917 Russian Revolution. This unique eye-witness account, written over seven days, offers us a valuable insight into the downfall of the Russian Czar by the hands of the revolutionaries. The letter records the cries for bread of the workers as they paraded down the Nevsky, to the mutiny of the regiments and the razing of the Senate as the soldiers sided with the people. It is a shame that Vera's earlier letters of her time in Russia are not also with this collection; nevertheless, this new accession, now available for research, will be particularly interesting for anyone studying Russian history and the events of Feb / March 1917.
