Details

The Management of Special Education in Developing Countries programme is for teachers, administrators and NGO staff who are working in special education in developing countries and who wish to develop their management or leadership expertise. The programme combines modules in Special Education with modules in International Studies in Education, using theory and practice from both in order to enable participants to improve management practice in the national context in which they work. A research dissertation also enables participants to put together management and special education in a uniquely relevant way for them.

This International Studies in Education \(/postgraduate/courses/taught/edu/international-studies-education.aspx\) programme has been taught at the School of Education for 50 years, and the School has one of the largest SEN departments \(/schools/education/departments/disability-inclusion-special-needs/index.aspx\) in the UK. In consultation with tutors, you will choose modules totalling 100 credits from those available in the International Studies in Education and Special Education programmes, with a minimum of two modules from either field. You will also need to take the Practitioner Inquiry in Education (PIE) module. A research dissertation will enable you to put together management and special education in a way which is uniquely relevant way for you.

Modules

In consultation with tutors, students choose modules from those available in International Studies in Education and Special Educational Needs programmes, with a minimum of two modules from either field.

International Studies in Education

Students can choose from the following modules:

Autumn:

- Education as an International Issue \(/postgraduate/courses/taught/edu/modules/education-as-an-International-Issue.aspx\) (strongly recommended)
- Education Observation, Evaluation and Supervision \(/postgraduate/courses/taught/edu/modules/education-observation-evaluation-and-supervision.aspx\)

Spring:

- Citizenship, Human Rights and the Environment \(/postgraduate/courses/taught/edu/modules/citizenship-human-rights-and-the-environment.aspx\)
- Personal and Professional Skills for Education Managers \(/postgraduate/courses/taught/edu/modules/personal-and-professional-skills-in-educational- management.aspx)

- Curriculum Design in Global Contexts \(/postgraduate/courses/taught/edu/modules/curriculum-design-in-global-contexts.aspx\)
- Leadership for School Improvement \(/postgraduate/courses/taught/edu/modules/leadership-for-school-improvement.aspx\)

Special Educational Needs

Students can choose from the following modules:

Autumn:

- Special Educational Needs of Children with Autism
- SEBD Identification, Assessment and Provisions

Spring:

- Curriculum and Approaches for Pupils with Autism
- SEND: Cross Cultural Issues in SEND
- SEND Practice Based Research

Each module is taught in either term one or term two of the academic year. Teaching takes place during three-hour sessions, once per week per module. Teaching methods include seminars, small group discussions, and presentations by participants. Assessment is through written assignments (normally one major essay per module) and other means, and can be based on your interests. Dissertation topics are negotiated with supervisors and the research and writing process takes place over the whole year, but mainly during the summer months.

Learning and teaching

The course permits a choice of modules from the International Studies in Education, and Special Educational Needs, courses. Students attend regular lectures and seminars for the first two terms, have personal dissertation supervision for the third term, and are assisted to access a wide range of library and online learning resources. The course is assessed by coursework assignments and a dissertation, and topics can be chosen to match the interests, expertise and needs of students. Some students do fieldwork for their dissertation in another country, but this is not a requirement. It is helpful if students have experience of working with disabled children in different countries, and bring relevant materials, which are not available online, for their coursework, e.g. printed project evaluations, reports in local languages, health education materials, photos and videos.

Employability

The MA in Management of Special Education in Developing Countries is ideal for graduates who wish to develop their management or leadership expertise within special education. Upon completion of this course, you will have experience in managing a variety of learning needs within your school and support colleagues to take a more inclusive approach in their own pedagogy.

With this Master's degree, graduates will become eligible to apply for a range of international posts in relation to SEN, Community-Based Rehabilitation (CBR), and project management. Sites such as 'Devnet' and 'UN Jobs' provide many examples of relevant opportunities. The degree does not give qualified teacher status in the UK or elsewhere, but is a valuable additional qualification for those who have a relevant first degree (e.g. international studies, psychology, social work, development studies, public policy), and/or a teaching or health care qualification.

There is the opportunity to work towards a further professional qualification in the field of Education both within schools and in other settings, including progression to a PhD. The excellent careers advice provided by personal tutors has encouraged many of our graduates to successfully apply for leadership roles related to inclusion and diversity in schools and other educational settings. These include: lecturers, policy developers, head teachers, special educational needs coordinators and managers of community and charitable organisations.
