

Development Management (Aid Management) MSc/GDip

International aid enters every debate about international governance, including climate change, security, debt, fairer international trade, corruption and poverty reduction. This programme provides a clear understanding of current issues and methods of analysis in aid management, as well as practical skills in aid management, against a background of analysis of the politics and economics of development.

The programme includes subjects such as the reform of aid management, financial management and aid, conditionality, evaluating aid, the role of NGOs and the future of aid. This specialist pathway will be of particular interest to aid managers from recipient countries and donor agencies, as well as to graduates seeking to work for donor agencies, NGOs or recipient countries.

The International Development Department is well-regarded internationally by sponsors, donor agencies, governments and NGOs. Study with us to benefit from:

- Expertise in key issues and skills valued by employers
- A vibrant, welcoming community
- Individual overseas fieldwork (/schools/government-society/departments/international-development/courses/fieldwork.aspx) or study visit included in fees (on-campus programmes)
- Flexible programmes and a wide choice of modules (<http://www.birmingham.ac.uk/postgraduate/courses/taught/govsoc/development-management-aid.aspx?OpenSection=Modules>) (part-time students also welcome)
- A diverse and international student body
- Strong support in study and English language skills

Each programme is taught by a team of multi-disciplinary specialists who work closely with students to address individual interests and concerns. Every student is allocated an academic tutor to support them in their academic progress throughout the year. The department has a long history of teaching students from across the world, and recent students have come from 99 different countries and a wide variety of professional and academic backgrounds.

Learning and teaching

Learning, teaching and assessment

The programme uses a range of learning and teaching methods including short lectures, group work, group and individual presentations, individual study and exercises. Each module is assessed differently using assessments that include 2,000–3,000 word essays, group projects, presentations, exercises and exams. A 10,000–12,000 word dissertation is also required for the MSc award.

By the end of your study you will gain:

- Skills in analysing aid management regimes and reform
- Writing skills to produce well structured and coherent essays and reports, making good use of references
- Oral presentation skills
- Ability to access material from different sources including policy documents and other publications from governments and international organisations, documents from the internet and from academic journals
- The capacity to interpret and make use of material from the above sources

Fieldwork

Gain first-hand experience of development concepts plus valuable work experience without additional costs. This Masters degree enable students either to carry out individual fieldwork (</schools/government-society/departments/international-development/courses/fieldwork.aspx>) in a country and on a topic of their choice or to take part in an organised study visit. Funding for this overseas study is included in the programme fee.

Enhancing your Student Experience

In the School of Government and Society we offer much more than a degree. As a student here, whether undergraduate or postgraduate, you have the opportunity to take part in a wide range of events (</schools/government-society/teaching/enhancing-student-experience/index.aspx>), with some or all of the costs paid for by the School.

Some of these are targeted to help you build skills and experience for your CV, others are more open events designed to expose you to high-level speakers on current debates relevant to all Government and Society students.

Georgiana Chiriac, Harvard Model United Nations (February 2013) (<http://www.birmingham.ac.uk/schools/government-society/teaching/student-profiles/postgraduate/idd/georgiana-chiriac-havard-mun.aspx>), "Overall, This opportunity was excellent for me and for the entire delegation in terms of gaining knowledge and expertise at the highest level, as well as with regards to personal growth and development."

Joseph Bergson, Postgraduate Study trip to Delhi (2012) (<http://www.birmingham.ac.uk/schools/government-society/teaching/student-profiles/postgraduate/idd/bergson-joseph-msc-idd.aspx>)
I found that in both class discussions and group work the level of knowledge from everyone on the course was very high and it felt really great to be among outspoken and clever people! The additional parts of the course also set it above others classes I have taken.

Employability

Careers

This specialist pathway enables those working in aid management from recipient countries and donor agencies, as well as graduates seeking to work for donor agencies, NGOs or recipient countries, to acquire essential knowledge and skills for career development within this area.

Alumni

Currently more than 3,800 IDD alumni (</schools/government-society/departments/international-development/alumni/index.aspx>) have taken their knowledge and experience to over 148 countries around the globe and are working in a variety of jobs in the public, private and voluntary sector.

We are extremely proud of the achievements of our alumni; many of them have gone on to do fantastic things post graduation including Concy Aciro (</schools/government-society/departments/international-development/alumni/profiles/postgraduate/2011-12/aciro-concy.aspx>) (MSc Poverty Reduction, 2007) who won the University's alumna of the year award in 2008.

“As a Member of Parliament and a leader, I will continue to use the skills and knowledge I acquired during my time at Birmingham and I am sure the experience will continue to support my efforts as both a Member of Parliament and in leading my constituents.” Concy Aciro (2009)
