Details

You will study four core modules [see full descriptions below]:

- New Directions in Modern British History
- Sites and Sources in Modern British Studies
- Historical Methods: Research Skills
- Research Methods & Skills: Dissertation Preparation

All core modules are assessed by 4,000-word essay.

You will also choose two 20-credit optional modules - one in autumn and one in spring - or a 40-credit special-subject module which runs across both terms. The 20-credit modules are assessed by 4,000-word essay, while special subject modules are assessed by one three-hour exam and one take home essay exam paper. An indicative list of options can be found below.

You will complete the MA with a 15,000-word dissertation on a topic of your choice.

Modules

You will study four core modules:

New Directions in Modern British History

This module will expose you to some of the key debates and moments in Modern British Studies and its associated historiography. There are difficulties in identifying organising narratives for understanding modern Britain. How do we write history that remains intellectually inclusive, avoids privileging historic and contemporary historiographical concerns and creates conversations that cut across regional, temporal and disciplinary boundaries? This module will introduce you to historical works that have stimulated new visions the past and its role in public life. If British society and culture has changed, so has the way that historians have approached and conceptualised it. While the module focuses on a series of key interventions, we will situate these in the context of broader debates about Modern Britain.

Sites and Sources in Modern British Studies

This module goes beyond thinking about Britain in terms of the great and the good and introduces you to rich and diverse sources through which historians have tried to understand the contours of everyday life in the past. The module will enable you to capture the pluralistic and inchoate messiness of ordinary life and historical change. A seaside postcard can be just as useful to a historian as a work of art. It is a module that will give you grounding in the interpretation of different sources and the problems and possibilities these present in studying the past.

Historical Methods

This module introduces you to the major developments in historical approaches since the Second World War and to some of the major schools of, or tendencies in, historical research such as the Annales School, the English historians' response to Marxism, cultural history, the linguistic turn, gender, history of science and critical social theory (Geertz and Foucault). The focus is on the application of the ideas to historical practice then and now.

Research Methods and Skills: Dissertation Preparation

This module covers what the dissertation project will entail. You will be expected to produce a short dissertation proposal for submission and you will be allocated a tutor who will supervise your dissertation preparation work. You will have one-to-one meetings with your supervisor, but you will also attend available generic sessions on skills run on the Research Skills module and available across the University.

You will also choose two optional modules from a range which may include:

- 'A Hard Rain's Gonna Fall': Nuclear Weapons and the Cold War
- Britain at the Movies
- Britain's Wars of Colonisation and Decolonisation
- Hidden from History: Homosexuality through History from the Ancient World to the Present Day
- On the Road to Nowhere? Traffic, Transport and Mobility in 20th Century Britain
- Reason and Romance: the cultural history of 19th Century Britain
- Sex and Sexualities in the Modern British World, 1880-1970
- Speaking to the People: Political Communication in 20th Century Britain

Alternatively, you may wish to choose a double special subject module. The options available will typically include:

- Britain and the Home Front in the Second World War
- Britain, the Slave Trade and Anti-Slavery in Late 18th and Early 19th Centuries
- British Army on the Western Front
- Dossers: A History of homelessness in modern Britain
- Facing the Fuhrer and Duce: British Foreign and Defence Policies towards the European Dictators 1935-40
- Mass Media and the Making of Modern Britain
- Of Rice and Men: NGOs and Humanitarianism since 1945
- Social Activism in Ages of Affluence and Apathy
- The Sharpe End: the British Army and the Defeat of Napoleon
- Where There is Discord: Making Thatcher's Britain

Learning and teaching

Learning and teaching on this course takes place via seminars, tutorials, reading texts on theory and methods and your own research on primary sources.

You will also become part of, and contribute to, the vibrant international community of the College of Arts and Law Graduate School, which offers dedicated research resources and a supportive working environment. Our team of academic and operational staff are on hand to offer support and advice to all postgraduate students within the College.

Support with academic writing

As a postgraduate student in the College of Arts and Law, you have access to the Academic Writing Advisory Service (AWAS) (<http://www.birmingham.ac.uk/university/colleges/artslaw/student-experience/opportunities/awas/index.aspx>) which aims to help your transition from undergraduate to taught Masters level, or back into academia after time away. The service offers guidance on writing assignments and dissertations for your MA/MSc programme with individual support from an academic writing advisor via tutorials, email and the provision of online materials.

International students can access support through the English for International Students Unit (EISU) (<http://www.birmingham.ac.uk/students/eisu/insessional/index.aspx>).

Employability

The University of Birmingham has been ranked 8th in the UK and 60th in the world for post-qualification employability in the latest global survey of universities commissioned by the International Herald Tribune.

Your degree will provide excellent preparation for employment and this will be further enhanced by the employability skills training offered through the College of Arts and Law Graduate School.

Birmingham's History graduates develop a broad range of transferable skills that are highly valued by a range of employers. These skills include: familiarity with research methods; the ability to manage large quantities of information from diverse sources; the ability to organise information in a logical and coherent manner; the expertise to write clearly and concisely and to tight deadlines; critical and analytical ability; the capacity for argument, debate and speculation; and the ability to base conclusions on statistical research.

Over the past five years, over 92% of History postgraduates were in work and/or further study six months after graduation. Some of our History postgraduates go on to use their studies directly, for example in heritage, museum or archivist work. Others use their transferable skills in a range of occupations from finance to civil service to fundraising. Employers that graduates have gone on to work for include: Alcester Heritage Network; HSBC; KPMG; Ministry of Defence; and the National Trust.
