

American and Canadian Studies Year Abroad blog

Posted on Friday 5th October 2012

Students on our American and Canadian Studies four-year degree programmes spend their third year at a North American university. As one cohort returns to Birmingham for the final year of their degree and another settles into their Fall Semester studies, it's a good time to reflect on the Study Abroad experience.

Natalia Scorer, who spent her Year Abroad at the University of Virginia in 2011-12, wrote a thoughtful and insightful blog that captures what she enjoyed, what she was surprised by and what she will miss from her time in Charlottesville.
