About

As a researcher in Byzantine history and culture I am particularly interested in historical narratives — their construction as texts — legal texts in their social contexts, Constantinople, palace and ceremonial. I am head of the postgraduate taught programmes of the Centre, convenor of the General Seminar and editor of the journal of the Centre, Byzantine and Modern Greek Studies.

Qualifications

- BA (Columbia, New York)
- PhD (London)

Biography

Ruth Macrides studied Greek and art history at Columbia University before taking her doctorate in Byzantine history at Kings College, London. She taught mediaeval history at the University of St Andrews before coming to the Centre for Byzantine, Ottoman and Modern Greek Studies, Birmingham. She is editor of Byzantine and Modern Greek Studies.

Teaching

- Crusades
- Ritual
- Travellers

Postgraduate supervision

My main areas of supervision are in the Comnenian and Palaiologan period, with special interest in historical writing, social and legal history, Byzantium and the crusades, the reception of Byzantium in the 19th and 20th centuries in Britain and Greece.

I have supervised six PhDs to completion on the Late Byzantine army, Late Byzantine cities, Diplomacy in the Palaiologan period, The Palaiologan court, Social relations in fourteenth-century Byzantium, War-writing in the middle Byzantine period. My present PhD students are working on the following topics: a biography of Manuel II; the empire of Trebizond and its relations with Constantinople; diplomacy at the empire of Nicaea; the horse in Byzantium, usurpation and dynastic succession; the horseback emperor on coins.

Research

Main areas of interest: Byzantine historiography; late Roman and Byzantine law, especially relating to marriage, inheritance, dowry, criminal law; social and kinship structures in the middle and late Byzantine period; western travellers to the east Mediterranean; the reception of Byzantium in Britain and Greece in the nineteenth and twentieth centuries.
