

Environmental Science programmes receive accreditation from the Institution of Environmental Sciences (IES)

Posted on Tuesday 27th November 2012

Our undergraduate programmes in Environmental Science have been accredited by the Institution of Environmental Sciences (IES).

Accreditation by this professional organisation reflects the high quality our degree programmes and recognises the excellence in teaching, learning and research aligned with professional development and practice. Our external review highlighted the value of our wide ranging degree programme together with the quality of skills development in an applied setting.

Students enrolled on our Environmental Science programmes are eligible to become Student members of the IES at no cost for the duration of their studies. This provides students with access to resources related to careers, professional development and events together with preferential opportunities for internship placements at the IES. Membership also provides the first steps for students in achieving chartered status, a highly valued professional award for Environmental Scientists.

View our undergraduate Environmental Science programmes \(/schools/gees/courses/undergraduate/index.aspx\).

