

News and events

Latest news and forthcoming events for the Environmental Health Sciences research group.

Latest news

Atom Feed (<http://www.ResFeedList.aspx>)

Researching the air pollution filtering effects of green walls \(/research/activity/environmental-health/news-events/29Aug12-mackenzie-green-walls.aspx\)

Professor Rob MacKenzie, in collaboration with researchers from Lancaster University, has produced a paper which suggests that by 'greening up' our streets a massive 30% reduction in pollution could be achieved.

27/11/2012

Environmental Science programmes receive accreditation from the Institution of Environmental Sciences \(IES\) \(/research/activity/environmental-health/news-events/29Aug12-env-sci-ies-accreditation.aspx\)

Our undergraduate programmes in Environmental Science have been accredited by the Institution of Environmental Sciences (IES). Accreditation by this professional organisation reflects the high quality our degree programmes and recognises the excellence in teaching, learning and research aligned with professional development and practice.

27/11/2012

BUCCANEER project recognised for environmental sustainability by the Lord Stafford Awards \(/research/activity/environmental-health/news-events/21Nov12-lord-stafford-award.aspx\)

BUCCANEER, an innovative partnership with Birmingham City Council which developed a climate modelling tool, won the award for Environmental Sustainability at the prestigious Lord Stafford awards held on Thursday 15th November.

27/11/2012

Displaying 1 to 3 of 3

Forthcoming events

Atom Feed (<http://www.ResFeedList.aspx>)

There are no forthcoming events

