Biography

Having left school without GCSEs or 'A' Levels Nicki spent over twenty years working with people with disabilities in a variety of social care agencies; she entered higher education for the first time in 1997 as a mature student. 8 years of study followed culminating in the completion of a Phd which examined lesbian experiences of social exclusion for which Nicki received the Ashley prize for the best social sciences thesis.

Teaching

Nicki teaches on a number of modules in the School of Social Policy as well as contributing to other teaching within the College of Social Sciences. Her primary interests are in: equality, citizenship and social inclusion; working with diversity - with particular emphasis on issues relating to sexuality and disability; ethics and values, and research methods and methodology. Nicki also contributes the interdisciplinary MRes in Gender and Sexuality Studies (<http://www.birmingham.ac.uk/postgraduate/courses/combined/arts-law-inter/gender-studies.aspx>).

Research

Nicki's research interests reflect her teaching interests, particularly sexuality and learning disability. Her current research activities are focussed on LGBTQ inclusivity in Higher Education and she continues to explore issues of care and relationships with particular reference to people with learning disabilities who care for others and caring relationships amongst LGBT communities. She is also working with the British Institute for Learning Disabilities developing research around Ageing and Learning Disability. (<http://www.bild.org.uk/information/ageingwell/>)
