In this time student numbers grew dramatically and the "year in industry", "international" and "communications" variants were offered. She has been Director of the Singapore suite of UG Business Management programmes since they were introduced, and following the success of this new venture stepped down from her UK role in summer 2010 to concentrate on developing the Singapore programme.

Our degree is a broad based business programme which is academic rather than vocational in nature. We encourage students to develop the graduate level skills which will enable them to succeed in Higher Education and enhance their employability. Our stated aim is to educate the future leaders of industry.

As well as traditional lectures students take part in group presentations, computer simulations, and their own research. As the degree is not specialised in any functional area, students have a wide number of employment options available to them when they graduate. A student studied Business with Spanish and is now an advertising executive:

James now is Managing Director of a number of companies <http://www.thebeansgroup.com> (<http://www.thebeansgroup.com/>)
