Biography

Originally a primary teacher, Lynn also taught at secondary and higher education levels in Mauritius and Malaysia as well as UK before moving into teacher education. She joined the University of Birmingham in 1985 and became Director of the Centre for International Education and Research in 1996. Key research, teaching and consultancy interests have been in education management internationally, particularly in areas of citizenship, equity, children's rights and student democracy. She has experience in Angola, Bosnia, the Gambia, Kosovo, Palestine, Malawi and Sri Lanka. She was a trustee of UNICEF UK for 6 years, and also served on their management committee. She has worked closely with UNESCO, conducting a global review of their Associated Schools in 2000 and chairing the UK Associated Schools Steering Group for 5 years.

Currently, Lynn's key focus is on education and conflict and extremism, and she has published and lectured widely on this. She helped in the development of Sri Lanka's National Policy on Education for Peace and Social Cohesion, and continues to assist with evaluation of the impact of the policy. In UK, she works with police and local government agencies on preventing violent extremism and on mentoring those at risk of radicalisation. She also works with UNICEF on children's rights; with British Council as a senior advisor on governance; and with GIZ and European Training Foundation on capacity development in fragile contexts.

Work on extremism has led to an interest in religion and education. She is working with OSCE on the production of guidelines for teachers in countering Islamophobia in schools and with colleagues in Israel and Palestine on an international edited collection on Gender, Religion and Education. A book is in preparation on Secularism, Security and Schooling which makes the case for an inclusive secularism as best promoting security and religious freedom.
