About

Richard is Co-Director of Education and Professor in the School of Education. He is responsible for the strategic and operational leadership and oversight of the School's programmes of study at all levels (undergraduate, taught postgraduate, and research postgraduate).

Teacher Education Partnerships are also a key focus. With the rapidly changing government policy and funding landscapes Richard has worked with colleagues to liaise closely with government and other key stakeholders. He has also helped the School become involved with Initial Teacher Education initiatives such as Teaching Schools and School Direct.

Richard has also been involved in the development of the successful application to government proposal for the UK's first University Training School (<http://www.birmingham.ac.uk/community/university-school/index.aspx>) working closely with the Head of School and as part of a team of colleagues from School, College and University. Work is now proceeding for the school to open in September 2015.

CPD linked to School Improvement is a further priority, in particular developing our partnerships with schools so that programmes to support staff and whole school improvement can be developed with partner schools and aimed at addressing their specific development priorities.

Qualifications

- MA Economics Education (University of London) 1986
- PGCE (University of Birmingham) 1975
- BA (Hons) Political Economy (CNA) 1974

Biography

Richard joined the University in 2011 from Staffordshire University where, most recently, he was Director of Partnerships and Education leading Education and also working with Universities, colleges, private sector organisations and charities across Eastern and Western Europe, India, Sri Lanka, Malaysia, Vietnam and China.

Previously, Richard was the first Head of Education at the University, leading the growth of a specialist cross-University team responsible for teacher education programmes with schools and colleges, wider workforce awards, CPD Masters awards, consultancies with public and private sector organisations and with charities in the UK and overseas including work in Ethiopia.

He led Education to achieve the highest possible OFSTED Inspection outcome of Grade 1, "Outstanding", in three successive inspections as well as to achieving excellent QAA outcomes and endorsements from TDA, LLUK and FDF.

Previously, Richard had worked at Canterbury Christ Church University, where he was the Director of the Centre for Education Leadership and School Improvement having previously held responsibilities for e-Learning, Quality, aspects of Teach First, PGCE and Masters programmes in school improvement.

Before Canterbury, Richard worked at the Institute of Education at the University of London and at the University of Manchester where he helped secure "Outstanding" OFSTED Inspection outcomes and worked with schools and local authorities across the country and in eastern Europe.

Prior to working in Universities, Richard taught for ten years in London comprehensive schools where he held middle and senior leadership posts.
