Posted on Friday 30th September 2011

Graduate Eleanor Woodall, who graduated from her degree in Applied Golf Management Studies this summer, is celebrating after getting her dream job as Ryder Cup project supervisor. Although young for the post, the experience she gained on her degree which is in partnership with the PGA and the fact that she is bilingual in English and French enabled her to impress the interview panel.

In her role she will be supervising the programme and overseeing the co-ordination of all of the projects linked with the event in Le Golf National near Paris, France including getting 100 new golf clubs and making the sport more financially accessible for everyone.

'I knew I wanted to pursue a career in golf and do a degree in golf and the AGMS course, was not just about 'golf' but also provided a host of other knowledge to work in sport'.
