About

Nick Bozic has worked as an academic and professional tutor on the initial training course for educational psychologists since 2004. His special interests include community psychology, strength-based practice, working with organisations and groups, evaluation design and the use of web-based technology to support learning. Nick also contributes teaching sessions on standardised test construction and use. Fifty percent of his time is spent working as a practicing educational psychologist in Worcestershire Local Authority.

Nick spent six years working as a research fellow between 1990-96. At that time he researched the use of technology with children with visual and/or multiple disabilities.
