About

Chris joined the University as a lecturer in Primary education and has since held the positions of Director of Studies for ITE and Head of Primary ITE. Her research interests cover the area of special needs and management alongside the area of initial teacher training. She was part of the School of Education team responsible for the DfES Transforming the School Workforce Pathfinder Evaluation Project and is particularly interested in the roles and responsibilities of SEN support staff. Her doctoral thesis evaluated the role of the SENCO in primary schools. Chris has also supported the British University in Dubai in setting up their teacher training programme and is currently undertaking joint research relating to children's career aspirations.

Biography

Before joining the University Chris held senior management positions in both secondary and primary schools in London and Birmingham. Her particular area of expertise was in supporting children with SEN within mainstream schools. Chris also worked for a large Local Authority for five years in a DfES funded project as a project manager undertaking research relating to school/community links in an area of social disadvantage. She then moved on to work in the area of CPD, firstly as a Director of a Teachers' Centre and then as a Curriculum Adviser for Primary schools.

Teaching

Chris's current position as Deputy Head of Department involves strategic planning for the area of Initial Teacher Education alongside teaching on the Primary PGCE programme and working in partnership with schools in the supervision of trainee teachers. She also teaches on the Med Teaching studies programme and supervises both MEd and PHD students.

Chris has been awarded a University of Birmingham Teaching Fellowship for 2013/14 to advance her work with the development of international programmes.
