Coastal Ecosystem Services for East Africa \(/schools/government-society/research/projects/idd/2014/costal-ecosystem-services-east-africa.aspx\)

This project draws on previous research experience, including from Swahili Seas, to find ways to increase the number of communities that can benefit from PES schemes and the range of ecosystems and ecosystem services that can be protected. A key concern in seeking to upscale pro-poor coastal PES schemes is the need to identify and understand potential barriers and supporting mechanisms within different levels of governance.

Networking for fisheries co-management on Lake Victoria, East Africa \(Jun 2014 - May 2016\) \(/schools/government-society/research/projects/idd/2014/networking-fisheries-co-management-africa.aspx\)

This research will contribute to co-management theory and practice by investigating the personal networks of fisheries stakeholders to find out who, and what types of relationships, influence fishers' behaviour. Relationships to be investigated might include who is consulted to gain information on where to fish, to whom fishers turn to borrow money or find employment. Such relationships influence fisherfolk behaviour and, in turn, attitudes to and engagement with co-management.

OECD 2011 Ensuring Fragile States are Not Left Behind \(Oct 2011 - Feb 2012\) \(/schools/government-society/research/projects/idd/2011/oecd-2011-fragile-states.aspx\)

The background to this Annual Report (since 2005) is increasing concern about the implications for international stability and development progress resulting from state fragility and the growing recognition that aid is one of many elements in the international effort in fragile states and that there are important linkages between activities that can and cannot be counted as ODA eligible.

State Fragility and Rural Development \(Jul 2013 - Mar 2014\) \(/schools/government-society/research/projects/idd/2013/state-fragility-rural-development.aspx\)

This project investigates the place of African states in the international system and seeks to understand what space exists for aid-dependent governments to exercise agency in relations with donors. In exploring these issues it focus on the case of Uganda's NRM regime which has enjoyed very substantial international support despite its increasingly authoritarian nature, destabilising regional policy and questionable human rights record.

This project analyses strategies used to create 'new' national identities after violent ethnic conflict in Sri Lanka and Rwanda and explores their implications. Both states experienced civil wars ended by a military victory and the substantial defeat of armed opposition within national territory. Post conflict governments in both states expressed an intention to promote a new national identity, replacing and de-legitimising ethnicity.
