About

I held the Established Chair of French Studies from 1990 to 2011. My research derives from specialist bases in French Studies, but is also cross-disciplinary and interdisciplinary. In general, I am interested in the relations of history, politics and narrative form - the operations of ideology in prose fiction, as they manifest themselves in particular texts. In French Studies, I work particularly on the fin de siècle, women's writing, 18th-century fiction, and modern drama; I have also written extensively on various aspects of Franco-British cultural exchanges.

Qualifications

MA, D Phil (Oxon)

Biography

I held the Established Chair of French Studies 1990-2011. My previous Chair was in French Studies at the University of Strathclyde (1988-1990). I have held the posts of Secretary and then President of AUPHF (Association of Professors and Heads of Departments of French, 1990-1995), and Deputy Convenor and Convenor of SCASS (Standing Conference of Arts and Social Sciences, 1988-99), where I was responsible for the initiative to set up All-Party Parliamentary Group for Arts and Humanities (launch November 19th 1997, House of Commons). I served in the 1980s on the National Executive of the Association of University Teachers, and helped set up the first sub-committees on Equal Opportunities for AUT and AUT (Scotland).

Postgraduate supervision

I have supervised a range of theses on women's writing, drama, the French Decadence, and the Caribbean novel.

Research

My research is known, published and reprinted in the UK, US, and Europe, and appears in major journals and publishing outlets in English Studies as well as French Studies. My interests are currently focused on the intersections of national and European identity, and European cultural contacts, in the first half of the 20th century. My literary biography of the Yorkshire writer, Francophile and Europhile, Margaret Storm Jameson (<http://ukcatalogue.oup.com/product/9780199558209.do>) was published in 2009 by Oxford University Press (interview with Jane Garvie on Woman's Hour: podcast (http://www.bbc.co.uk/radio4/womanshour/03/2009_12_fri.shtml)). I am now writing a book on Samuel Beckett for Irish Academic Press.

Other activities

I am a member of the editorial board of English Studies (Universidad de La Rioja, and Universidad de Valladolid), the Gapper Book Prize Committee of the Society for French Studies, and Treasurer of the Raymond Williams Society (<http://www.raymondwilliams.co.uk/>).
