

The Selective Attention and Awareness Laboratory (SAAL)

The Selective Attention and Awareness Laboratory was established by Dr Jason Braithwaite (</schools/psychology/labs/saal/jason-braithwaite.aspx>) in 2002, in the School of Psychology, University of Birmingham.

It currently houses a fully equipped event-related psychophysiology laboratory and the latest computer hardware / software for behavioural experiments in visual cognitive neuroscience. The laboratory has been fortunate enough to receive support from the following sources illustrated below. We gratefully acknowledge and thank those institutions for their previous and continued support.

The Leverhulme Trust

