HSMC, in conjunction with colleagues at the Nuffield Trust are delivering a one day seminar on Friday 30 September to explore aspects of priority setting and rationing. The event which will take place at Park House, University of Birmingham, will also highlight the key skills and capacity needed for effective future practice. With input from leading researchers, practitioners, and policy experts, the seminar draws on good practice examples and simulation exercises to explore issues such as:

- The use of evidence and information in priority setting
- The role and purpose of economic and technical models and processes
- Engagement and involvement of stakeholder groups (including public, clinicians, provider organisations)
- Leadership skills
- Governance structures
