Research projects

Superdiversity - Civil society and new migrants in superdiverse contexts, Marie Curie Fellowship \(2014-2017\) \(/schools/social-policy/departments/applied-social-studies/research/projects/2014/civil-society-and-new-migrants-in-superdiverse-contexts.aspx\)

This project aims to investigate the role of civil society organisations (CSOs) for new migrants in superdiverse contexts. It explores whether CSOs are instrumental in the building of social relations during new migrants' settlement process. This social aspect of the settlement process, also described as social integration, is crucial regarding other aspects of settlement such as access to education, housing and the labour market.

The primary aim of this programme of research is to develop ground-breaking comparative analysis on the interplay between forms and modes of contemporary political membership, migration governance, and politics of belonging through the in-depth examinations of a range of contemporary experiences of political and social membership.
