Biography

Fiona joined Birmingham Business School in 2007. She has a PhD in Economics from the University of East Anglia (1989) and an MPhil in economics from Cambridge University (1985). Her first degree in Economics, Politics and Quantitative Methods is from The University of East Anglia (1983). Her main theoretical and empirical contributions are concentrated at the intersection between labour economics, the sociology of work and HRM, in health economics and in sports economics and policy. Current research is focussed mainly around employment and policy issues linked to older age, the ageing society and the care economy.

Teaching

Undergraduate Level 1:

- Economics for Business

Undergraduate Level 3:

- Labour Economics
- Advanced Business Economics (see www.economicnetwork.ac.uk/businessseconomics)

Masters/Doctoral level:

- Introductory and quantitative Research methods

2003 recipient of the Outstanding Teacher Award by the Economic Centre of the Learning and Teaching Support Network for teaching on game theory

Postgraduate supervision

Fiona supervises doctoral researchers working on:

- The ageing labour force
- Gender, ageing and work
- Informal care and paid employment
- The economics of Sports and sports policy

Current doctoral research students are working on a range of projects including: retirement decision making, female employment in Saudi Arabia, participation of older Chinese workers in physical activity and demographic ageing in China.

XIAOCONG YANG: Demographic ageing in China: income in later life, labour market effects and the employment costs of informal care. An empirical study employing the CLHLS, CHNS and CHARLS micro-databases to investigate the impacts of demographic ageing on the labour market, the distribution of income and the welfare of the elderly population in China: demographic transition in China; income in later life; income inequality and health status among older people; opportunity costs of informal elder care; comparisons with France, Germany, UK and China.

CHRISTIAN KWEKU DARKO: Wage Inequality in Ghana: The Role of Education, Skill-Biased Technological Change and Foreign Direct Investment. The econometric analysis focuses on: the impact of educational attainment and skills on wages and how differences in educational attainment contribute to wage inequality; the impact of technical change on relative wages over time and whether this implies skill biased technical change; the impact of multinationals on wages in the Ghanaian labour market and; the impact of wage differentials and wage inequality for economic growth in Ghana.

PhD opportunities

Research

Fiona's research is concentrated at the intersection between labour economics, the sociology of work and HRM and in health economics. She also researches topical issues in sports economics and policy and has published work in economic development and game theory.

A major focus of her research is on the interaction between paid work and individual characteristics and circumstances including older age, caring responsibilities and ethnicity. Current research is located around issues linked to older age and the ageing society, uses mixed-methodologies and is inter-disciplinary.

Main areas of current research are:

- The ageing labour force: Ageing and employment, retirement decision making, active ageing
- Women's unpaid work particularly the trade-off between informal care provision and paid employment
- Economics of sports and sports policy

Other activities

University management: Director of Doctoral Research in the College of Social Science
