About

I am currently Head of the Arabic section of Languages for All.

I am also the Project Convenor for the British Academy International Partnership and Hans Seidal (Tunisia) funded research network: We are organising a conference 'Arabic and Gender Discourse(s) in the Arabic-speaking region', scheduled for the 29 March 2013, bringing together international scholars working on the digital technologies in the MENA region and their role in re-shaping and re-defining the region. Selected papers will be published in the specialized international peer-reviewed journal Continuum: Journal of Media & Cultural Studies contracted and scheduled to appear in 2014.

Qualifications

I studied for a PhD in Linguistics at the University of Leeds. After this, I held an ESRC Postdoctoral Fellowship for three years at the University of Durham. The project was entitled Globalisation and its impact on Arabic (Modern Standard Arabic and dialects), and was an interdisciplinary project analysing the linguistic changes that happened to Arabic as a result of the 'Internet Revolution' using an Internet based corpus, developing into deeper analyses of the cyberspace and the relationship between language and the various discourses that emerged prior, during and post Arab Revolutions.

Teaching

I teach Translation Studies Modules: (Translation and Professional Communication Skills Module, Applied Translation Module and Extended projects), Readings in Modern Arabic, Arabic (3 levels) and Open Access Arabic Modules (Open to the public).

Postgraduate supervision

In collaboration with Dr Benedetta Rossi \(/staff/profiles/dasa/rossi.aspx\), West African Studies, we have been successful in getting a PhD scholarship to work on Arabic Sources for West African History, West African Manuscripts in collaboration with the British Library.
