About

Ben Kotzee is lecturer in the School of Education. He works on topics in the philosophy of education and focuses on applying insights from contemporary epistemology to questions regarding intellectual character development. He has written on the epistemic aims of education and on the nature and development of expertise; he is the editor of Education and Social Epistemology (Wiley-Blackwell, 2013). In the Jubilee Centre for Character and Virtues, he works on virtue ethics in the professions and leads a project investigating medical students' and doctors' understandings of character and values in their profession. Ben Kotzee holds a PhD in philosophy from King's College London and was previously lecturer at Birkbeck, University of London.

Qualifications

PhD (Philosophy) (London)
