About

Sarah joined the University of Birmingham in 2006 to pursue a Research Support Facility fellowship. She spent two years as a research associate working on various projects including a study examining the barriers and facilitators for 'hard to reach' groups accessing health and social care services.

Sarah completed a Cancer Research UK funded PhD in 2012 looking the adverse outcomes of undergoing a colposcopy.

Following this, she spent a year as research fellow on a project exploring data methods collection utilised with teenagers and young adults with cancer.

Prior to joining the University of Birmingham Sarah spent 10 years working in the Voluntary and statutory sector (BSMHFT) in the field of addictions.
