Biography

Rachel qualified as a social worker in 1988 and has worked in a wide variety of areas; initially she worked as a generic social worker and then moved into specialising in working with children and families. She has worked in the areas of child protection, child and adolescent mental health and looked after children. She has developed services for children and has worked as a self-employed social work consultant and trainer. Rachel moved to work as a researcher and social work lecturer but still works as an independent social worker chairing child protection conferences and looked after reviews for various local authorities. Rachel is also a qualified Practice Teacher

Teaching

- Module leader, Preparation for Practice Learning (BA and MA Social Work)
- Information and support workshops and specialist training days for practice educators and work based supervisors
- Information and support workshops for Practice Tutors

Research

- Rachel is currently evaluating the first 18 months of a joint initiative between the University of Birmingham and a local social enterprise project (SWEET), to place students in a family support agency. This initiative is designed to expand quality practice learning opportunities for under and postgraduate students in social work training at the University of Birmingham.
- Rachel has recently evaluated a project set up with the police and probation services in the West Midlands to offer student practice placements in non-traditional settings.
- Previously Rachel worked on a three year National Evaluation Project of the Children's Fund and has been involved in a number of research projects with children and young people who are refugees in the UK.

Other activities

- UOB representative JUCSWEC Learning and Teaching Committee
- UOB representative at regional and sub-regional Placement Planning Groups
