

Making friends

University gives you the opportunity to expand your horizons and meet new and exciting people. Put in the effort to get involved, and you may find you have made the friendships of a lifetime.

Halls of residence

Students tell us the people they meet first at university often become friends for life. If you are living in university accommodation, the group of people you share a flat with can be a rich source of support, information, and fun.

If you need a little extra support, student advisers are available through the Student Mentor Scheme to help you with any issues, big or small. You can contact the Student Mentor Scheme by emailing mentors@guild.bham.ac.uk (<mailto:mentors@guild.bham.ac.uk>).

Course/induction sessions

Many students make friends within their discipline. Induction sessions held at the beginning of the year offer good opportunities to meet and get to know your peers, so make sure you attend your induction sessions as a priority. Look out for these on your induction timetable (available from the 13 August).

Student societies

The Guild of Students offers almost 200 student societies \(http://www.guildofstudents.com/groups\) for everything from music to circus skills. Keep up a current interest or try something completely new!

Sport

If you're interested in sport, Birmingham is a great place to be. With support and facilities for over 40 team and individual sports, you're bound to find a club to suit you.

Faith communities

Our multi-faith Chaplaincy \(http://www.intranet.birmingham.ac.uk/chaplaincy\) offers you a space to meet other students in your faith community. They host a range of faith-based student societies as well as activities and events that cross faith and denominational boundaries. The University Guild of Students also boasts a wide range of student-run faith and religious societies.
