

Widening Horizons in Business is team taught by academic tutors from across the Business School who each bring research-led perspectives to our understanding of how business is changing; and the implications of some of the important new and emerging challenges for business in contemporary societies.

You will learn about, and will be asked to reflect critically on, the impacts of economic, social and environmental change and disruption on businesses and the people who work in, with, and alongside them. You will be given the opportunity to ask questions also and to discuss and debate a wide range of issues concerning the fundamental purpose(s) of business and how businesses operate.

John Gibney

summer 2020