What does education policy literature say?

- Policy implementation is a triptite partnership between the state, school and community. (Davies and Hughes 2009)

- What is planned or prescribed does not necessarily happen in practice. (Goodson 1994)

- English education system is riddled with conflicting policies. (Priestly and Humes 2010)

- ‘Policies are interpreted and ‘translated’ by diverse policy actors in the school environment rather than simply implemented’. There is a need to understand how schools, in particular teachers ‘respond to, manage, interpret and balance a constant stream of policies’. (Braun et al 2010)

Pfe champions in schools

☐ Head teacher:
The head teacher is very kind of pro-financial education as a topic and he really does see the value in it and that is kind of the main driving force behind lots of the things we’ve introduced this year. You know, very often these types of things, that it needs a champion to kind of push it forward and he is very much the kind of person that wanted it in the first place.

[Nathan, Head of Department & Business Studies Teacher, Brookfield academy]

☐ Head of departments:
Mathematics and Business studies & Economics
Power of Exam boards

“Teachers don’t know what the national curriculum says, no teacher has ever really read the national curriculum because they don’t care, they don’t have time to do that and it’s a bit of a wasted effort anyway because there’s a whole layer of interpretation that’s done by exam boards in between the national curriculum and what teachers teach.”

[Jack, Science teacher & research director, Copperfield Academy]
Conflicting policy environment

- Too many changes:
  Structural/ examination/ assessment/ curriculum
- Academisation agenda
- League tables/Ofsted:
  Progress eight/ Attainment 8
- Overcrowded curriculum:
  School & PSHEe
- Teacher workload

Future of Pfe Delivery

Teacher’s viewpoint when asked about future of personal finance education teaching in schools:

“If I’m honest, I don’t see a lot of significant change. I’m not seeing anything. I could be wrong but at the moment I’ve seen nothing to suggest to me that there is a massive change in expectations [regarding Pfe] going forward.”
Conclusion: Raising Pfe profile
