'I was really interested in pursuing an academic career and knew that this would not be possible without a postgraduate degree. I really enjoyed the research aspects of my Masters and Birmingham has a really active PG community with opportunities to present your work or to have in published in the University's journal.

I'm currently working as a student engagement facilitator within the College of Arts and Law. I'm also continuing to teach on some of the Masters courses, helping to run a conference and developing my research into an exhibition through one of the University's collaborative partnerships. The really great thing about the University of Birmingham is that you're still able to be part of the diverse research community and take part in many activities even after you have finished your degree.'
